Category: Uncategorized

The Winter 2015 issue of Perspectives in Health Information Management features an evaluation of a new PHI-removal tool; an exploratory study on data required for electronic health record inclusion; the results of a study on older adult's perceptions of e-prescribing; and research on the realities of electronic health record adoption.

Perspectives in Health Information Management is a scholarly, peer-reviewed journal, referred to by professors, professionals, public officials, industry leaders, and policy-makers. Since 2004, Perspectives has been one of the most credible and respected journals of the HIM industry, and is referenced in notable indices such as PubMed Central (PMC), the Cumulative Index to Nursing and Allied Health (CINAHL), and Google Scholar. Join Perspectives in celebrating more than 10 years of scholarly publishing that advances health information management practice.
